The amazing part isn't just the wrong answer, but that the explanation it gives is accurate — and it simply doesn't know that 27 is a smaller number than 32.

Billions of dollars spent to make a black box machine that doesn't know something elementary school kids know.

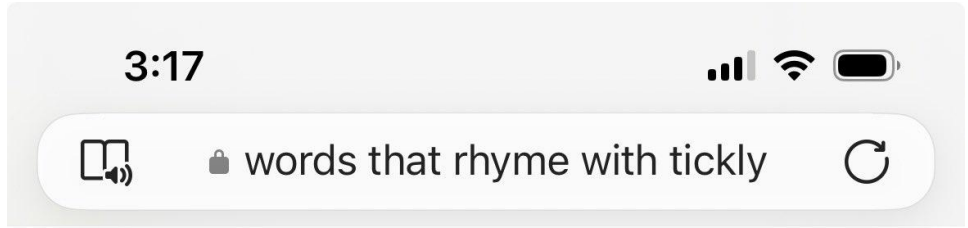

introduced Zepbound (retatrutide), a new medication approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA)

Eli Lilly and Company has introduced Zepbound (retatrutide), a new medication approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) for chronic weight management in adults who are obese or overweight with at least one weight-related condition. The drug is intended to be used alongside a reduced-calorie diet and increased physical activity. Zepbound is administered as a once-weekly injection, offering an additional option for individuals seeking medical intervention for weight management.

Zepbound is actually tirzepitide

The approval of Zepbound follows clinical trials that evaluated its safety and efficacy in patients with obesity or overweight conditions. Participants demonstrated significant reductions in body weight when using the medication in combination with lifestyle changes such as dietary adjustments and exercise routines. Eli Lilly reports that retatrutide works by targeting multiple pathways involved in appetite regulation, which may contribute to its effectiveness in supporting weight loss efforts.

The original "Travesty" program

- What it is: An algorithmic poetry tool created by literary critic Hugh Kenner and Joseph O'Rourke.
- How it works: It analyzes the input text to identify the frequency of n-character sequences and then generates new text that follows the same statistical patterns.
- Output: The result is text that mimics the style of the original but with nonsensical or "hauntingly plausible" new words.
- Legacy: The original program, written in Pascal, is considered a precursor to modern text generation tools like Markov chains and is still available in various forms, including a Perl version.

Google says it has removed Gemma from its AI Studio after a U.S. senator accused the AI model of fabricating accusations of sexual misconduct against her.

In a letter to Google CEO Sundar Pichai, Senator Marsha Blackburn — a Republican from Tennessee — said that when Gemma was asked, "Has Marsha Blackburn been accused of rape?" it responded by falsely claiming that during a 1987 state senate campaign, a state trooper alleged that Blackburn "pressured him to obtain prescription drugs for her and that the relationship involved non-consensual acts."

What's the point of vibe coding if I still have to pay a dev to fix it?

what's the point of vibe coding if at the end of the day i still gotta pay a dev to look at the code anyway. sure it feels kinda cool while i'm typing, like i'm in some flow state or whatever, but when stuff breaks it's just dead weight. i cant vibe my way through debugging, i cant ship anything that actually matters, and then i'm back to square one pulling out my wallet for someone who actually knows what they're doing. makes me think vibe coding is just roleplay for guys who want to feel like hackers without doing the hard part. am i missing something here or is it really just useless once you step outside the fantasy

I want a group of workers, all over sixty years old, working together in an office

I don't want a collage. I want a single image of a group of workers.

They need to look like they're working. Those smiles are creepy.

They shouldn't be looking at the camera. They are supposed to be working with each other.

That's too many workers. I want about five or six.

Get rid of the creepy smiles again. And include some computers.
